been ill with the mumps has returned to school and is in charge of his classes. Prof. Edgar Forsyth, of the Irvington High School, is now a member of the Shortridge faculty, having come to take charge of the students sent from the Irvington school to the S. H. S.

There will be a class in graduate English this term in charge of Professor Thomas, senior English teacher. The work in the new subject will comprise the study of Mathew Arnold's criticism and other higher English work.

The seniors of the Manual Training High School, comprising the class of January, 1903, that was graduated last Wednesday, will give a life-sized picture of Principal Charles E. Emmerich to the M. T. H. S. as the present from the organization. T. C. Steele will do the work. The picture will be finished by April, and will be purchased with the money made at the Kellogg lecture some time ago. One hundred and seventy dollars was cleared.

At a recent meeting of the Shortridge High School Oratorical Association it was decided to hold the primary contest at which a representative for the final will be selected at either Roberts Park or the Lutheran Church. The date of the primary is Feb. 28. The manuscripts will be in the hands of Principal Hull two weeks before the contest and will then be sent to the judges. It cannot be ascertained how many candidates will be in this year's primary and there is much talk as to who the contestants will be. Only three are avowed candidates George Posey, Alfred Brandt and James Meyers. It is understood that the critic Claude Bowers has helped five students, but who the two "dark horses" are is a question. Six contestants are allowed to speak at the primary.

BUTLER COLLEGE NOTES.

Tuesday morning the new pastor of the Third Christian Church, the Rev. C. B. spoke to the students on the value of a college education.

Steel Engraving Lore.

Here is a prize for library-hunting. When and where did the art of steel engraving originate? Obviously it is an important art, without which it would be impossible to produce 10,000 wholly uniform engravings. Of paper money it is necessary to print millions of pieces, each kind to be absolutely uniform, and of postage stamps, those art works in miniature, the call is for many thousands of millions. Most of the postage stamps bearing the portrait of Queen Victoria were derived from one plate made in 1840. All the world knows that Jacob Perkins, he of Newburyport, Boston, Philadelphia, and England, invented this particular process, and official records show that his invention was substantially complete in 1809. It is known, also, that in 1809 he had been at work upon his process for many years. He appears to have taken out a patent bearing upon this invention before 1800. His object was to print bank notes not easily forged, and incidently he seems to have become the father of steel engraving, not the least of nineteenth century achievements. As early as 1809 he undertook to introduce his art in England, whence it spread all over the continent, But most of the records bearing upon the origin of steel engraving have disappeared. and an example of the art produced before 1830 might be worth its weight in diamonds

The Archbishop on Fate.

Boston Herald. Said a pert young woman to the late archbishop of Canterbury: "I do believe there is such a thing as fate. Now, I have an aunt who I know was born under a lucky star. Only last week she was going to take a steamer, but just missed it by five minutes. She took the next boat, and when she arrived at the end of her journey she learned that the ship she had missed had been wrecked. Now, don't you think that was good fortune pure and simple? "I don't know," answered the archbishop. "I never met your aunt."
